Akerman Partner Barbara Edwards Recognized Among ‘Women of Influence’ in the New York Business Journal

September 20, 2021

Top 100 U.S. law firm Akerman LLP is pleased to announce that partner Barbara Edwards has been recognized as a “Woman of Influence” by the New York Business Journal, one of only 10 chosen this year by the publication. The executives featured were selected from a field of nominees by a team of editors and reporters representing the New York Business Journal and its parent company, American City Business Journals. She will be profiled in an upcoming issue.

“These 10 executives have made an impact both professionally and in their communities throughout their careers,” the New York Business Journal wrote in its cover story. “Over the past 18 months in particular, they’ve had an impact on their companies and the people around them — both inside and away from their offices — at a time when unprecedented challenges have become part of daily routines.”

“They’ve found their successes in a range of businesses affecting New York City’s economy, including real estate, law, finance and the sciences,” the publication continued. “They’ve also been active pursuing charitable endeavors, serving in their communities, and working to develop future professionals for their companies and their industries.”
