Akerman Partner Tamara Malvin Named a “Power Player” by Sports Business Journal

October 25, 2021

Top 100 U.S. law firm Akerman LLP is pleased to announce that partner Tamara Malvin has been named a “Power Player” by the Sports Business Journal for her extensive work in Sports and Gaming Law.

Sports Business Journal, a national publication that is part of the American City Business Journal network of 64 publications across the country, said its “Power Players” are individuals and businesses “involved in the biggest legal deals in sports, working with the premier organizations in the industry, helping shape the current sports landscape and developing future leaders in the business.”

The firms and attorneys on the list were selected after months of research and consultation with sources across the sports business, the Journal wrote.

Malvin, a Litigation partner based in Fort Lauderdale, primarily represents U.S. businesses and individuals in gaming and hospitality, as well international entities when they are sued in the United States. She routinely advises gaming, casino, and resorts, hotel operators on regulatory and other operational concerns, and manages litigation and appellate matters that arise on their behalf.
