President Joseph R. Biden, Jr. on Saturday, June 25, 2022, signed legislation to rename the federal courthouse in Tallahassee, Florida after the late Honorable Joseph Woodrow Hatchett, a former partner at Akerman LLP. The U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate approved the move, which was part of the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act.

“We are gratified that the federal government is honoring Judge Hatchett’s lifelong commitment to justice and public service by naming the courthouse in Tallahassee for him, an honor that could not be more well-deserved,” said Akerman Chairman & CEO Scott Meyers. “Akerman has advocated for the bill’s passage since its inception, and we are overjoyed to see our dear friend and colleague recognized for his outstanding legacy.”

Judge Hatchett attended Florida A& M University and Howard University School of Law, and was admitted to the Florida Bar in November 1959. In 1966, he was appointed assistant United States attorney for the Middle District of Florida, then first assistant United States attorney in 1967. He was appointed a United States magistrate for the Middle District of Florida in 1971. With this role, Judge Hatchett became the first Black federal judicial officer in the South.

In 1975, Judge Hatchett was appointed to the Florida Supreme Court by Governor Reubin Askew, who called the appointment the most satisfying act he performed as governor. Judge Hatchett became the first Black Justice to serve on Florida's highest court. In 1976, Judge Hatchett became the first Black person to win a Florida statewide contested election in the twentieth century. In 1979, he was appointed by President Jimmy Carter to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, becoming the first Black person to serve in a federal court in the Deep South. Judge Hatchett served as a federal circuit court judge for 20 years, including a role as Chief Judge of the 11th Circuit from 1996-99.

Judge Hatchett retired from the bench in 1999 and became a partner at Akerman, where he chaired the firm's Appellate Practice and served as a member of the firm's in-house moot court panel, Akerman Bench. He was a counselor and confidant to many firm lawyers and served in the highest levels of leadership, as he helped guide the firm to its national prominence.

In February 2021, Judge Hatchett was presented with a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Florida Supreme Court Historical Society. The society honored Judge Hatchett, "in recognition of his highly distinguished career as a lawyer, his many years of extraordinary contributions to Florida's Legal System as a highly respected member of the Judiciary, and his lifelong devotion to the improvement of the lives of others."
