Montoya Ho Sang Advises TIX Professionals to Focus on Compliance with Current Regulations Rather Than Proposed Changes

August 1, 2023

In a University Business article, Akerman Higher Education and Collegiate Athletics partner Montoya Ho-Sang urged colleges and institutions to focus on compliance with the current regulations rather than making drastic changes to their policies and procedures ahead of the finalization of the Title IX regulations. She said summer is the best time for university officials to review current regulations.

University Business wrote: “And while Title IX offices may wait anxiously for the fed’s Title IX announcement, its implementation date is up in the air. When the Biden administration originally announced its Title IX changes in May, a typical 60-day turnaround to finalize the rules would have put the regulation’s implementation around August, according to Ho-Sang. Now that it’s supposed to come out in October, she is curious whether the feds would force implementation during the holiday season or mid-academic year, during spring 2024.”
