Liz Rocha focuses her practice on a variety of complex commercial litigation matters in federal and state courts, including reimbursement disputes, antitrust, and consumer protection matters. Liz has experience handling antitrust, trade regulation, and advertising, as well as healthcare coverage and reimbursement dispute matters.

Liz counsels food, beverage, and consumer product and service companies regarding existing or proposed advertising materials, including product packaging, labeling and distribution materials, and social media and website content, as well as analyzing similar competitor materials and comparative advertising campaigns. She also supports defending clients in consumer class actions alleging unfair and deceptive practices and false advertising relating to customer agreements and disclosures, product labeling, advertising, and online sales.
