Neisen Kasdin Speaks with Miami Herald on Future Trends for City's Real Estate

October 14, 2015

Miami Office Managing Partner Neisen Kasdin provided The Miami Herald with an investment outlook for the city's residential real estate market. The publication reported the supply of downtown developments available in Miami's urban core satisfies market demand, a sign the sector has reached its maturity. Kasdin explained how this wave of real estate construction across Miami has brought solid projects sponsors with sound financial backing after the 2008 market slowdown. As buyers absorb current inventory levels for new residential units in downtown Miami, he noted, developers and investors are looking ahead to the next cycle with new projects in the pipeline amid the city's continuing expansion.
