The American Lawyer Features Akerman on the Future of Law

August 6, 2014

Akerman was mentioned in The American Lawyer article titled, “Emerging Technology Shapes Future of Law,” which detailed the latest innovation initiatives that notable firms are implementing into their business strategies. The article highlighted Akerman’s Taxability Matrix, a tax compliance product, citing Akerman as one of the few firms that have developed technology-driven innovation. The article also recognized that Akerman is deeply invested in the future of law and the notion of disruptive innovation, with innovation programs in place that offer the potential to transform traditional legal service and models of client interaction.

“...innovators are exploring ways to leverage increasingly sophisticated software, machines and devices to deliver legal services cheaper, quicker and more accurately. Some law firms are exploring technology-driven innovation initiatives... Akerman has created a self-service tax compliance product for clients,” the publication wrote.
