Daniel Johnson focuses his practice on renewable energy finance and corporate law. He counsels clients on tax credit equity investments and secure development, construction, and permanent debt financing for projects generating clean electricity across the United States. Daniel is adept at handling permitting, environmental, and enforceability opinions for transactions under North Carolina and New York law.

His experience extends to corporate structuring and formation, including entity transfers and limited liability company document drafting, facilitating effective collaboration with financing parties. Daniel's practice involves structuring and documenting syndicated loan transactions, drafting and reviewing corporate and financing documents, and advising on reliance letters, power purchase agreements, and permitting documents. His comprehensive approach ensures clients achieve their business objectives in the renewable energy sector and beyond.
