March 31, 2014

Luis O’Naghten and Martin Domb co-authored an article titled, “International Arbitration in New York and Miami” for the New York Law Journal, following their related practice update. Their article addressed how recent judicial moves have placed New York and Miami among the leading centers in the world for international arbitration, and how the two cities fundamentally differ as venues for arbitration.

“There is no disputing the increasing importance of international arbitration or of the rapid progress of New York City and Miami as international arbitration hot spots ... each city has a committed group of arbitration professionals who seek to promote an active, favorable environment for international arbitration,” wrote O’Naghten and Domb.
