Richard Leland Quoted on The Hill on Business Implications Behind Possible Clean Water Rule Repeal

June 24, 2018

Richard Leland was quoted in a report by The Hill titled, “Five Things to Know About Efforts to Repeal Obama’s Water Rule,” discussing the legacy of what many agree is one of the most notable policy controversies affecting the real estate sector and the odds of its survival. A leading authority on the many disputes surrounding the rulemaking process behind the federal Clean Water Rule, Leland discussed how the latter has created serious consequences for the real estate sector, after having adopted what many say is a debatable interpretation of what the U.S. Code defines as Waters of the United States. Leland also treated the subject at length in a recent New York Law Journal article.
