Eric Goldberg Gives Insights Into Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's Hiring Freeze Lift to The Wall Street Journal

August 27, 2019

Eric Goldberg spoke to The Wall Street Journal following the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's announcement that it was lifting a hiring freeze that went into effect in late 2017. Goldberg, who served as a CFPB managing counsel prior to joining Akerman, gave his point of view having served with the governmental agency for six years.

"Ongoing hiring is important to the agency maintaining a critical mass of staff and to protect current employees from being overburdened," said Goldberg. He said the jobs posted recently are "key positions to the functioning of the bureau."
