The Akerman Scholarship, which awards $2,500 a year for up to four years of higher education, is funded through an endowment established in 2015 as part of the firm's historic $1 million pledge to the National CASA/GAL Association. The endowment supports young adults who have spent part of their childhood in the foster care system, by helping minimize the financial burden of higher education. The honorees demonstrate outstanding academic commitment and readiness for success.

“Idelia possesses the grit, resilience, and drive necessary to achieve her dreams,” said Beth Zafonte, chair of Akerman's Philanthropic Council. “She has the proven perseverance to flourish in life, having risen above obstacles and roadblocks that no child should not have to endure. The Akerman Scholarship will ease financial constraints and help Idelia achieve her goals.”

“Fostering the futures for all of our youth is an important initiative of National CASA/GAL Association. Our partnership with Akerman is just one of the many ways we are able to help exceptional youth like Idelia achieve their full potential,” said Tara Perry, CEO for National CASA/GAL Association. “We are committed to supporting and strengthening older youth and expending resources to youth who are preparing to age out of foster care.”

Robinson-Confer is a dedicated advocate for homeless youth in foster care, drawing from her own experiences when she entered the foster care system at the age of 13. She is actively involved in organizations and initiatives that directly address the needs of local neglected youth. Robinson-Confer testified on two occasions in support of resources for homeless youth before members of the Pennsylvania State House. Influenced by her own struggle owning proper clothing, as a high school student she organized a clothing drive for children in foster care. The overwhelming response led to part of the contributed clothing being donated to the Children’s Bureau. In 2017, her outstanding leadership abilities were recognized with the Judge Feliciani Youth Leadership Award, presented to young adults in Westmoreland, Pennsylvania, who have displayed outstanding commitment to their community and volunteerism.

As a college student, Robinson-Confer has excelled in her studies, while continuing her advocacy by helping establish an on-campus organization in support of fellow students in foster care. Robinson-Confer is pursuing an undergraduate degree in psychology while maintaining a 4.0 major GPA. She is also pursuing a minor in Leadership Studies. Upon graduation, she aspires to leave a positive impact on children and youth who have similarly experienced the foster care system. She wants to help children in foster care understand that their background does not stop them from being successful. Robinson-Confer, a first-generation college student, will also pursue a master's degree.

Robinson-Confer was nominated by Florence Jenkins, her CASA volunteer since entering the foster care system. In their six-year relationship, Jenkins has advocated on behalf of the wellbeing of Robinson-Confer during court proceedings. Studies demonstrate the invaluable benefits a CASA volunteer brings to a child's life. Children with a CASA/GAL advocate are more likely to do better in school. Only 46 percent of youth in foster care earn a high school diploma, compared to 84 percent of all students nationwide. Only 15 percent of foster youth attend postsecondary institutions, with only about one percent completing college due to insufficient support, lack of appropriate guidance, and unmet financial needs. The goal of the Akerman Scholarship is to help these students afford higher learning so that they will be more successful after they age out of foster care and live independently.
